The chance to spot and observe whale species, wherever you may be headed, is one of the chief thrills of small ship expedition travel. Clockwise: Southern right whale, fin whale, bowhead whale, humpback whale, short-finned pilot whale, killer whale, narwhals, gray whales, blue whale, beluga whale, minke whale, sperm whale.

DEAR TRAVELER,

It's October 12th and I'm writing this from Tahiti. I've spent the last two months in French Polynesia working, exploring, and trying to fathom how the future will develop on so many fronts. It's been a remarkably sad eight months with pockets of joy and exhilaration, particularly here where it is so beautiful and where the people are so uniformly delightful. It is my fervent hope that I can convince you to one day come here, if you have not yet. There is so much beauty and wonder, both naturally and culturally. But that's not the point of this letter.

We are about to carefully, thoughtfully, and responsibly bring our ships back to life. We haven't taken this lightly. A dedicated team has been joined at the hip for the past six months working on the details of a multi-faceted plan to re-engage, as I mentioned, carefully, thoughtfully, and responsibly.

We are heading back into the wild, with perhaps an added level of purpose. These past months have been tough on the environment and people in so many places: rangers who protect against poachers in parts of Africa no longer employed; illegal fishers moving more freely as patrol boats are shut down. Resources for the protection of the wild will inevitably be strapped as economies have been hard hit.

We want to actively find creative ways to pick up some of the slack, to be a lifeline of sorts to places that desperately need support. We as a company, tourism as an industry, and travelers can do so much to fulfill the notion of 'rewilding'—a concept of protecting an environment and working to bring it back to its natural state. We can and, I believe, must come to the aid of our wild heritage, and the people who depend on its health, wherever it exists, by celebrating it, revering it, and finding our own paths to support its essential existence.

We need to get back out there and show these places some real love. Rangers and park wardens need to get back to work, NGOs need to get back to work, and so many people whose livelihoods are connected to travel need to get back to work.

And you, I believe, need to confidently get back to exploring. After all, it's something you've done so admirably, and long to do again.

All the best,

Sven-Olof Lindblad

THE WILDNESS AT THE

If there was anything good that came out of the pandemic, and it's hard to say there was, it was the silence.

As COVID-19 stilled human sound and motion, the whole world heard it: a silence in which something was calling out to be heard:

HEART OF THE WORLD

Now, it's time to listen. To find out what the world has to say. To give the places where wildness is still sovereign, or still in harmony, or, still unbroken, a genuine listen.

It's time to travel, almost in a spirit of pilgrimage, to wild places and observe them from within, to see them in all their particularity, and learn the names there—of the animals, rocks, and trees. Time to walk with wind and clouds across vast wild landscapes. See mammoth whales moving beneath the skin of the sea. See time in thatched roofs, apex predators stalk, and countless birds swoop and dive.

And, in the act of giving our attention fully to the world's still-wild places, perhaps we'll restore something—our ability to see, hear, know, and connect to the elemental forces that are the essence of life, and that will restore us to wholeness.

LET'S REWILD. LET'S GO MEET THE WILD AGAIN, WITH HUMILITY AND REVERENCE, AND COME BACK TO LIFE.

Española Island, Galápagos.

PURE WILDNESS

The expeditions featured in this section have the same focus, the same mission—to defy the odds of wind, wave, weather, and wariness to find and observe wildlife. To revel in the complicated, yet ultimately simple, act of paying attention. To not simply see the wild creatures with whom we are privileged to share the planet, or to photograph them, or even to remember always that we did see them, but to know their world, learn something of their lives, and thus demonstrate our reverence for their sovereign otherness.

MAKING IT EXCEPTIONAL FOR YOU

Looking, searching, finding. There is a persistent belief that wildlife is everywhere, it's easy to find, and that if we just go to the right location, the wildlife is waiting there for us. Nothing could be further from the truth. Finding wildlife is a combination of being in the right place, at the right time, with the right people who are actively searching and know what to look for. I work with some of the best wildlife spotters in the world, people tuned by years of disciplined and diligent observation who always have their eyes open and never let down their guard. The payoffs are extraordinary wildlife encounters, and the joy of sharing these experiences with people who have never been part of the process of looking, searching, and finding.

—EXPEDITION LEADER, RAB CUMMINGS
Instagram @rabcumplings, #workwelove

Making your expedition exceptionally rewarding is our goal, and our team is key.

Our naturalists have the knowledge and passion that will kindle yours. They will do whatever it takes, including keeping a constant lookout so you don't miss the thrill inherent in every kind of sighting—from the surprise of a blue whale off Patagonia, or an approaching polar bear in the Arctic, to the trail-side birth of a sea lion pup in Galápagos.

They'll help you see, do, and process all the extraordinary experiences. Our hotel team will know what you like and how you like it from Day One. The captain and officers will welcome you to the Bridge anytime—to scan for wildlife or simply enjoy the calm business of ship navigation. And exclusively on our expeditions, an undersea specialist and a video chronicler fill out the team to provide a unique perspective, and a lasting record of your eventful days.

WILD BEAUTY

Beautiful people make even those of us who proudly consider ourselves unmoved by another's appearance dumb with admiration and fear and delight, and struck by the profound, enervating awareness of how inadequate we are, how nothing, not intelligence or education or money, can usurp or overpower or deny beauty.

—HANYA YANAGIHARA, The People In The Trees

Simply substitute landscapes for the word people in this quote, and you'll understand the power of the places featured in this section to move us. Exploring them, we are both humbled and ennobled daily.

TRAVELING WITH FRIENDS

When my husband Keith and I learned our first-choice Antarctica expedition was sold out, our friend Christine recommended we go to South Georgia and the Falklands instead. We trusted her advice, even though I knew very little about these subantarctic islands. What a discovery! We walked among hundreds of thousands of penguins, we hiked in Shackleton's footsteps, and watched black-browed albatross feed their chicks from a few feet away at the world's largest colony!

We fell in love with Lindblad Expeditions' intimate expedition style of travel. So, when Christine said she was planning to go on their Marquesas expedition in 2018, we asked to go along and invited another friend, Mary, to make a foursome. We ended up traveling so well together that we signed on for Arctic Svalbard, Greenland and Iceland in 2019.

One of the many pleasures of traveling in Lindblad Expeditions' style is the community that forms on board; it's easy to make friends. But the deep pleasure of traveling with friends, sharing countless experiences with each other, within the communal experience has made it our favorite way to travel. Another aspect of traveling together was the book-ending, the extra adventures we were able to enjoy.

After our Marquesas expedition ended in Tahiti, we headed to nearby Moorea to go ATV-ing—an adventurous land counterpart to our sea experience. We had a quintessential French Polynesian waterside lunch at the Moorea Yacht Club, and later back at the InterContinental Hotel in Pape'ete had a luxurious swim and dinner. The perfect transition between away and home.

When we went to the Arctic, we first rendezvoused in Oslo for a couple of days of sightseeing and dinner at the highly recommended Nodee Sky in the Barcode—reindeer sushi!

I can't recommend going on an expedition with friends more highly. It's the best. We made wonderful memories, and will always enjoy recalling them together.

WILD ISLES

Some lie on the horizon lumped and brown like basking tortoises. Others appear like sudden mountains thrusting up from the sea. And still others seem to weave the clouds down from the sky, shifting them like veils to create mirages—is the island snowcapped? on fire?—or to simply vanish. But whether they manifest as apparitions or invitations, islands are the ultimate reason to travel by ship. There is simply nothing like standing on deck, or on the Bridge, as an island materializes out of the blank vastness of the sea. The islomanes among us live for these moments, the sheer number of islands in the world a goad for their passion. For the rest of us, somewhere on the continuum between ‘have had’ the experience and ‘never have,’ the itineraries in this section hold unparalleled promise.

EXPEDITION PHOTOGRAPHY

You're off the coast of a Kuril island, and a low-flying Steller's sea eagle is passing the ship, talons clutching a silver fish... enchanting children are dancing for you in the village of Hapatoni in the Marquesas... a pod of gleaming killer whales are surfacing under the bow rail in the mirror-calm waters of the Lemaire Channel...

It's moments like these when you will be grateful to have a Lindblad Expeditions certified photo instructor at your side and at your service. Our instructors have been specially trained to assist you with your camera model and settings, plus the basic elements of framing, composition and light; and using your smartphone camera effectively. Best of all, because each is also an expert naturalist, they can provide tips on wildlife behavior to help you anticipate and capture amazing moments. And depending on which ship of the Lindblad Expeditions fleet you're on, you could find yourself shooting side-by-side with a top photographer. They explore with us because of the remarkable wild regions we visit, and because they're excited to share the expedition experience and their skills with photo enthusiasts of all levels. With you on deck and in field situations, they provide inspiration and advice, gleaned over the course of significant careers. They also offer informative onboard presentations, and supportive critiques.

WILDNESS & HUMAN HISTORY

In the arc of one voyage, see elegiac traces of the last of the woolly mammoths and the emblematic remains of the Soviet Union's collapse. Traverse the Panama Canal and feel an inner cheer at how the man-made lives in harmony with the lush tropical diversity it borders. Imagine yourself as Hiram Bingham seeing the ruins of Machu Picchu entwined by jungle as you survey its glory from on high. Witness the ancient traditions of indigenous people deeply connected to their place in Haida Gwaii. Or encounter the Inuit navigating the extreme changes of climate in the High Arctic. The expeditions in this section explore the essence of geography: how the land influences the culture within it.

ALWAYS SOMEONE INTERESTING TO MEET

Our connection to the world's wild places through conservation and personal relationships in far-flung locations has deep roots. For many guests that's a compelling reason to choose to explore the planet with us. But there's more: things are often extra interesting aboard our ships.

For example, in Galápagos, we've recently signed an agreement with the National Park, formalizing Lindblad Expeditions ships as platforms of opportunity for science in Galápagos, facilitating research and advancing the training of young local scientists.

We've been doing this sort of thing worldwide for decades—helping researchers, like James Balog of the Extreme Ice Survey study glacier retreat, and scientists, like John Durban and Holly Fearnbach, conduct research on Antarctica's rare Type D killer whales. And through citizen science observations, our naturalists, undersea specialists, and often guests, contribute to science's knowledge of whales, mantas, and the polar underseas.

We've always given fascinating individuals 'rides' to field sites. And through the Grosvenor Teacher Fellowship, a professional development opportunity for pre-K–12 educators, we bring teachers out into the world and inspire them to bring the world back to their classrooms—with far-reaching effects (see page 75 for an example). Then, there are our Global Perspective Guest Speakers and others, who come aboard to share their knowledge and insights, as well as the adventure, with our guests.

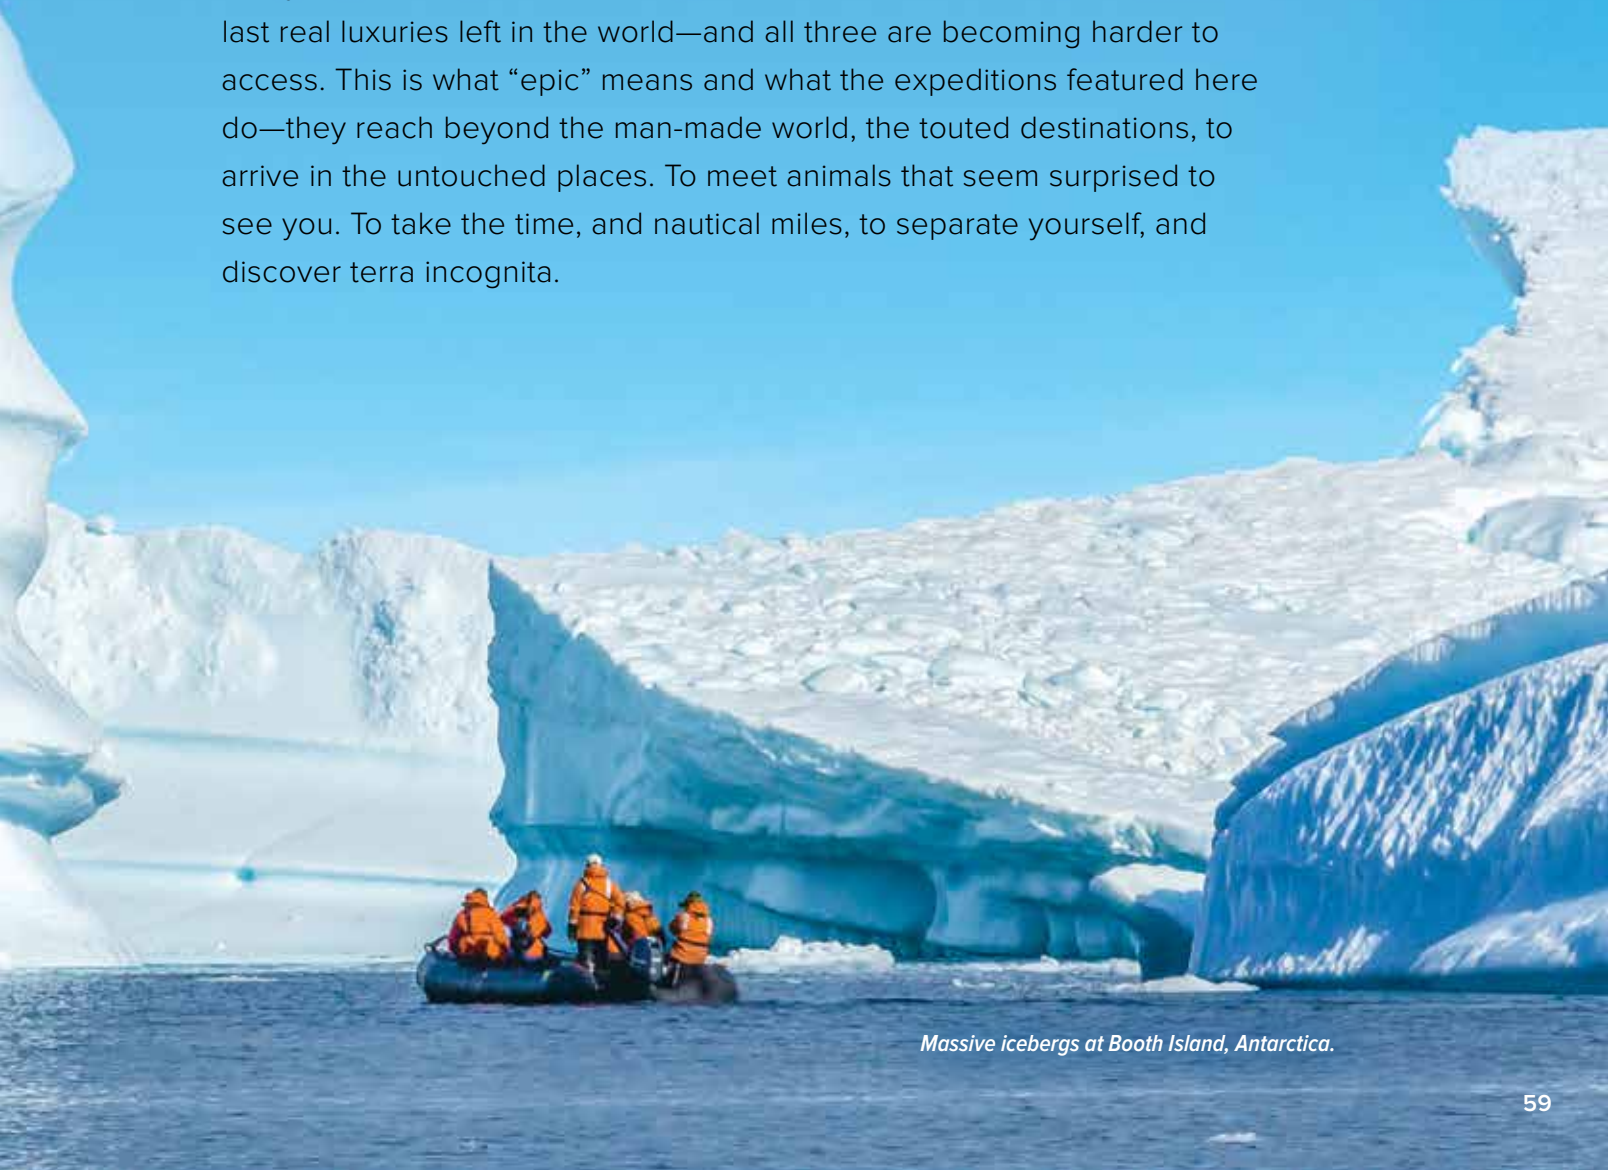

This is a real boon for you—the prospect of not only exploring charismatic geographies, but also of meeting genuinely interesting people aboard our ships.

WILD ADVENTURES

“Away” is not just a place—it’s taking the time, and the sea route, to let the magic of discovery happen. It’s the patience of watching the horizon for spouting whales, or seeing the outline of a remote island materialize, the joy of letting the birds change your plans, and the belief that nature always delivers the best show. For nature, silence, and solitude are the last real luxuries left in the world—and all three are becoming harder to access. This is what “epic” means and what the expeditions featured here do—they reach beyond the man-made world, the touted destinations, to arrive in the untouched places. To meet animals that seem surprised to see you. To take the time, and nautical miles, to separate yourself, and discover terra incognita.

FAMILY TRAVEL

*Expeditions are more immersive than just observing a place as a tourist without context. They endeavor to understand the soul of a place with a holistic approach that includes a deep information dive into the past, present, and future through a team of experts in their field. We just finished an epic expedition to Antarctica with the company that pioneered this kind of travel: Lindblad Expeditions. They specialize in taking guests on experiential journeys to far corners of the world; although their trips follow a predefined course, their information-centric approach explores a destination from a variety of expert perspectives. Taking kids on an expedition is the ultimate educational adventure for families. It takes the idea that travel is the best education we can give our children to a whole new extraordinary level.

—AMIE O'SHAUGHNESSY

Ciao Bambino, Family Travel Advisors

We believe shared activities in a wild and unfamiliar environment can bring a family together. And we've found that kids thrive in the safe, comfortable space of the ship where they can exercise a measure of autonomy. Our naturalists are excellent role models who deftly embed 'smart fun' into every activity. Our expeditions ensure seamless transitions whether you're simply coming to the ship and returning home after, or adding a side trip or extension. And whether you're traveling with a nuclear or multi-gen family, or planning to go with your family's 'bubble', we offer savings on a wide variety of family-friendly trips.

▶ See expeditions.com/offers for more, or see the specific itinerary that interests you.

Global Explorers Program

Our exclusive program for kids and teens is the only one of its kind, offered on our Alaska, Baja and Galápagos expeditions. It's designed to help kids under 18 develop the attitudes, skills, and knowledge of an explorer. Kids of all ages engage in a variety of cool optional activities, relevant to their specific ages, guided by a certified field educator.

▶ Visit expeditions.com/family for program details.

Kids track their findings and record observations in their very own Field Notebook.

WILD ESCAPES

The expeditions in this section offer the same exhilarating experiences as our classic expeditions. They're simply shorter and, as a result, more convenient for travelers without the luxury of time to commit to an extended sojourn. In just five days, you can explore pristine, species-rich and seldom-visited Channel Islands National Park, effortlessly traversing the ocean that separates it from California. Go beyond the Blue Lagoon to discover the wild west coast of Iceland. Actively explore the incredible Galápagos islands in seven days, or add three days and experience the wonders of Machu Picchu too. Here, time is on your side.

PIONEERING FARM-TO-TABLE IN GALÁPAGOS

Ana Esteves, Lindblad Expeditions’ Director of Hotel Operations, has cultivated a farm-to-table culture in Galápagos. We have purchased some 30 tons of fresh produce, invested money in the farms, and contributed to their well-being and production. And reducing the need to import produce from the mainland by sourcing locally means reducing our carbon footprint as well. Here’s what Clemente, a farmer who supplies us with carrots, cabbage, pineapples, lettuce, leeks, white onions, butternut squash and blossoms, has to say about the program:

“What I love the most about farming in the Galápagos is being able to give back to this Island I grew up in. I could spend days on end in the field under the sunshine or rain, but as long as I am out there with my plantation I am happy and fulfilled. Before Lindblad Expeditions, there was no sign of any tourist wanting my products, it was all for the locals. Lindblad has opened up so many possibilities for me and my family and our future. Anita (refers to Ana Esteves) has shown us that what we have been doing has a name, sustainable farming.”

TURNING TRASH INTO TREASURE

The Lindblad Expeditions Artisan Fund supports the local creative community. The Fund not only provides artisans with instruction, materials and support, it links upcycling to economic possibilities, as one successful artisan describes:

"I started making paper to pearls in 2011, when Lindblad Expeditions brought Sarah, an instructor from Uganda, Africa, to Galápagos to teach members of the community how to turn paper into pearls. The paper I use to make paper to pearls basically comes from discarded magazines and catalogues (including old Lindblad Expeditions brochures from the ships). I take this material and choose the most vibrant and alive colors. Over time, I learned to turn this unwanted material into beautiful pieces. [Lindblad] started buying my jewelry, to sell in their ships in various parts of the world."

—DAYSÍ PATIÑO, Santa Cruz Island, Galápagos

EMPOWERING TEACHERS THROUGH TRAVEL

We have long believed that teachers are heroes, and deserve to know there are people out there who respect their work, their dedication to their students and to education, and are willing to recognize and support their growth and development. The Grosvenor Teacher Fellowship is the professional development opportunity we we created, to give current Pre-K–12 classroom teachers and informal educators the opportunity to feed their curiosity about the world, learn, and bring geographic awareness back—by traveling aboard our fleet. Since the start of the program in 2007, some 265 Fellows from 48 states and 6 Canadian provinces, plus Washington D.C. and a Department of Defense Education Activity school abroad, have utilized their fellowship experience to inspire tens of thousands of students and educators to care about, and protect, the planet.

Jennifer Chavez-Miller, a veteran educator, National Geographic Teacher Advisory Council member, Fulbright Scholar, and recipient of the 2020 National Geographic Gilbert M. Grosvenor Educator of the Year award, speaks for many in describing her experience:

"Being a Grosvenor Teacher Fellow means being connected to other educators across the planet and to my students—past, present, and future. It means being connected to the world in just such new and visceral ways. It also means that I'm an empowered teacher. I'm empowered to create opportunities and experiences for my students to be explorers. I have the opportunity to dream big, and now I have a support network to make those dreams a reality."

—JENNIFER CHAVEZ-MILLER, 2018 Grosvenor Teacher Fellow, Albuquerque, NM

OUR SHIPS

Our expedition ships are framing devices, metaphoric yellow rectangles, through which you look at the world. Our ships galvanize your gaze, directing it outward, enabling you to pay the same rapt and informed attention to wildlife and wild places that our species gives to the culture we value—art, music, and performance. As a result, after an expedition your senses are heightened. You see your surroundings in keener detail, and benefit from dopamine and other rich brain rewards that come from sustained attention, not just ‘clicks’ or ‘likes.’

It’s what makes ship-based travel so vital to the Lindblad Expeditions mission to explore and understand the world. And now that our fleet has grown—with more blue-water ships, come more blue-sky possibilities.

And life onboard is remarkable, too. Being in the wild doesn’t mean renouncing comfort, cossetting amenities, or superb food. Our hotel team will know what you like and how you like it from Day One. Regardless of how often you’re in your cabin, it will be immaculate when you return. And, understanding the age-old adage that “an expedition travels on its stomach,” our chefs and their galley teams make dining daily full of interest, discovery and in many cases, the rich flavors of the region you’re exploring. Wherever possible, and our team has expanded the notion of possible (see page 74), it will be local and/or sustainably produced or caught.

We invite you to dream big in 2021-22.

SEA CLOUD

Traveling aboard Sea Cloud, a historic four-masted barque, is an overall multisensory experience of the rarest kind—and this is true wherever you choose to explore. Sea Cloud in the Caribbean is idyllic because little competes with the sensual pleasure of the balmy air and the constant trade winds that invite everyone out on deck. And Sea Cloud in the Mediterranean is quintessential because it provides non-stop opportunities to set off from our anchorages or ports—where Sea Cloud is invariably the most beautiful ship—to explore the extraordinary beauty and charm of coastal towns, and linger among antiquities and sites ‘sacred’ to Western civilization. Whether you’re passively watching the athletic young crew scrambling high in the rigging, lolling in what Marjorie Merriweather Post called the “blue lagoon,” or learning to capture the sun on sails with your certified photo instructor, the life aboard Sea Cloud is either the point, or the perfect interlude between explorations. We invite you to hedge your bets against winter 2022, or the ordinary, by booking a Sea Cloud voyage. And remember, another rarity we offer is Sea Cloud elegance, enjoyed with Lindblad Expeditions’ signature informality—pack your deck shoes & shorts, please!

► Visit expeditions.com/seacloud for ship details, itineraries, dates, and rates.

2021 availability is limited. Please check the website or call an Expedition Specialist for itineraries, rates, and dates, for sailing on the Sea Cloud to the Caribbean, Greece and the Mediterranean in 2021 and beyond.

The historic four-masted barque Sea Cloud is sailed by hand, meaning all of the sails are raised and controlled by her crew—seeing them “hit the rig” is to behold traditions of a mostly bygone era.
